From the Manassas Gap Railroad.

A dispatch from Washington in the Northern papers states that the Manassas Gap Rail road has been repaired to Rectortown Station. On last Friday, however, a portion of the tract pear the station was torn up by the Confeder erates but it was subsequently repaired, notwithstanding the working party was fired upon. Yesterday, it appears a much more serious af fair occured. "The superintendent of the road had started on the way to Piedmont, or be yond that point, with two trains containing material for building the road. When a mile and half the other side of White Plains, it was discovered that the track had been torn up.-The trains were then started back, but the Con sederates poured a volley into them, killing Mr. J. McCrickett, who had jst been appointed superintendent, Edward J. Bolt, the conductor, and Ex Lieut. Col. Fuller, formerly of the 13th Michigan, who had gone on the train to ac quire experience as a conductor. The engineer is also reported killed. Mr. Glasscott, the agent, and a number of others were wounded.
